This two-and-a-half-day course is designed to explore critical national security law (NSL) and contracts law (KFL) issues in today's rapidly evolving technological landscape. Expert-led panel discussions will cover the integration of industry tech with military capabilities, creative ways to leverage federally funded public-private partnerships, and strategic considerations in procuring cutting-edge technologies like artificial intelligence.

Prerequisites - This course is intended for experienced (senior-level/mid-level) legal practitioners from all military branches and DoD agencies who advise on NSL or KFL issues at the three and four-star level, as well as legal professionals supporting organizations that directly deal with public-private partnerships in tech initiatives. Examples include officers in field-grade billets or equivalent civilian personnel whose portfolios include advising on the use of emergent technologies, technology law, or tech acquisitions.
